A computer science student found two usable Epson computer systems while scouting for goodies in the state warehouse.

Unused, broken equipment piles up inside warehouse

By Jane Phillips
Staff Writer

Any department on campus can benefit from other school departments' "old stuff."

Recently, Dan Malone, a computer science senior, was on his usual scouting trip to the state warehouse on campus when he found two Epson computer systems.

The computers were transferred to the Mustang Daily office for staff use.

"We haven't hooked them up to the system yet but they seem to be working," Malone said.

They had been previously used by Disabled Student Services.

Donna Nichols, support services coordinator for DSS, said the department secretaries used the Epsons for the majority of their work, but the system was faulty.

"The whole system would freeze up and we would lose everything we had just entered," she said.

In addition, DSS bought new programs and the memory in the Epsons was not large enough to run them, she said.

"We ran the software on other computers and they worked, but when we tried to use them on the Epsons, they didn't work," she said.

DSS also had computer technicians from El Corral Bookstore take a look at the Epsons several times. Each time they could find nothing wrong, she said.

"We needed a reliable computer and decided that an IBM would work the best," she said.

Marcus Von Engel, assistant sales manager of the computer department of El Corral Bookstore, said the used Epsons are probably worth between $300 to $400. New Epsons would cost about $700, he said.

The state warehouse is the site of all obsolete, broken or unused desks, tables, calculators, computer equipment and any other materials from all departments on campus.

Royce Randall, supply room keeper of the state warehouse, said that any department can contact the warehouse to request any needed materials.

Police catch car burglars during attempted theft

By Travis Swafford
Staff Writer

One car was burglarized and another was in the process of being ransacked Oct. 3 when Cal Poly Police Sgt. Steve Schroeder interrupted the crime.

Schroeder was on standard patrol in the R-2 parking lot across from Yosemite Hall when he noticed the attempted burglary taking place, said Public Safety Investigator Mike Kennedy.

Schroeder intervened and apprehended Arturo Lopez, one of four perpetrators. The other three escaped, Kennedy said.

However, a second suspect, Joseph Souza, was later picked up by Santa Maria police.

Lopez and Souza each face one felony charge of burglary and one felony charge of attempted burglary.

At the time of his capture, 19-year-old Lopez, a Santa Maria resident, was found to be in possession of two seat covers and burglary tools, Kennedy said.

He said that Public Safety then issued a "be-on-the-lookout" bulletin to surrounding law enforcement agencies in hopes of catching the other three suspects.

Within hours, members of the Santa Maria Police Department had picked up Souza, also of Santa Maria.

"Souza had just been released from custody on Oct. 2," Kennedy said.

Kennedy declined to elaborate on the nature of the previous crimes, because Souza, 20, was a minor when they were committed.

Warrants were issued for the remaining two suspects, but charges were dropped due to lack of evidence.

"I just wish they would keep scum like that off of campus," said Jim Gabel, one of the burglary victims.

Gabel was unsure how the burglary took place.

"The doors were locked," he said. "I guess they came through the flap window and unlocked the door."

Gabel said he did not become aware of the burglary until he got in the car the next morning.

At that time, he discovered that his seat covers were missing and that the car stereo was also gone.

Kennedy said the car stereo was apparently discarded after it was stolen.

The second victim wished not to be identified and was unavailable for comment.

Threat of prowlers has Cal Poly students taking extra precautions

San Luis Police report an increase in trespassing calls

By Carolyn E. Nielsen
Staff Writer

Reports of prowlers have some Cal Poly students taking extra security precautions in their homes.

The San Luis Obispo Police Department has received 19 calls from addresses near campus since school began, said Detective Greg Clayton.

Police have filed crime reports for 11 of the calls when officers found evidence of a trespasser.

"There is an incredible influx of cases when school starts," he said. "The big problem is that people drop their guard when they come here to go to school. San Luis has a low homicide rate and only a small amount of gang activity as opposed to the Bay Area or Los Angeles Area. People feel safe here."

Students are the most popular targets for "peeping Toms" and burglars because they are not as careful as they should be, Clayton said.

Clayton said three men have been arrested and charged with the misdemeanor crime of prowling in the last 30 days.

One of the three men was arrested after trying to break into a back window in Val Thompson's downtown home at 1704 Broad Street last week.

"I saw a police officer standing outside my front window about midnight," said Thompson, a home economics junior. "When I opened the door, he came running in and asked us if we were OK. It was really scary because we had no idea what was going on."

Thompson said neighbors called the police after seeing a man attempting to break into the house.

"When we went in the backyard, it was surrounded by cops looking for the guy," she said.

The police found a car with the keys in the ignition parked nearby and waited for the man to return to the vehicle, Thompson said. When he did, he was arrested and charged with four misdemeanor counts, she said.

Sorority houses also have been a target for prowlers in the past year, said Clayton.

He has been called to Alpha Phi, Zeta Tau Alpha and Gamma Phi Beta for reported trespassers. Officers have also visited Sigma Kappa sorority.

Michelle Montna, a human development junior, lives on Foothill Boulevard.

"After my bike got stolen, I hired an electrician to put in motion-sensor lights in back of my house," she said. "I feel a lot safer now."

Montna said she has been much more cautious since someone tried to break in to the Alpha Phi sorority house where she lived last year. The intruder fled on foot and was never apprehended, said Clayton.

"We have new locks on all of our doors. They are locked 24 hours a day," said Denise Delph, an agribusiness junior and the house manager for Alpha Phi sorority. "We have really tightened up our security."

Zeta Tau Alpha President Stefanie Mauel said that her sorority house has an excellent security system with automatic door locks and motion-sensor lights.

However, Clayton said that the intruder arrested at Zeta Tau Alpha entered the house in broad daylight. He said it is paramount that people are very aware of what is going on and that students need to be alert

WORLD*China asks Taiwan to reunite with mainland

BEIJING (AP) — China's Communist leaders on Wednesday marked the 80th anniversary of the revolution that ended imperial rule by urging the breakaway province of Taiwan to reunite with the mainland.

"As we commemorate the 80th anniversary of the Xinhai Revolution, we still feel very uneasy about the unfinished work of unifying the motherland," President Yang Shangkun said in opening remarks at an elaborate memorial celebration.

In Chinese, the revolt is called the Xinhai Revolution because it occurred in 1911, the Xinhai year under an ancient calendar system.

In urging Taipei to accept Beijing's conditions for reunification, Yang invoked the name of Sun Yat-sen, whom both mainland Communists and the Taiwan Nationalists regard as modern China's founding father.

"Otherwise, how can you face our ancestors, how can you face Mr. (Sun) Yat-sen?" Yang asked.

Sun is credited with leading the 1911 revolution that toppled the Ching dynasty. The revolt began on Oct. 10, and that date is celebrated by the Nationalists in Taiwan as their national day. On the mainland, the revolution has been marked in the past only on the 50th, 60th and 70th anniversaries.

In 1949, the Nationalists lost control of China and retreated to the island province of Taiwan after losing a bloody civil war to the Communists. Both the Communists and the Nationalists claim to be the legitimate rulers of all China.

During his speech Wednesday, Yang accused advocates of an independent Taiwan of being manipulated by "foreign forces" and warned that "those who play with fire will perish by fire."

NATION*Thomas support drops due to delay of vote

NEW YORK (AP) — Public support for Clarence Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court dropped from 63 percent three weeks ago to 50 percent after the Senate delayed its confirmation vote, an ABC News-Washington Post poll found.

The vote on Tuesday was put off for a week to investigate allegations he sexually harassed a former assistant.

In the poll conducted Tuesday night, there was little difference in response between men and women.

Thomas' confirmation was supported by 54 percent of men and 47 percent of women; it was opposed by 24 percent of men and 26 percent of women.

Sixty-three percent of respondents said if the former aide's allegations are substantiated, that would be sufficient reason to reject the nomination.

Bush plans to ease U.S. 'credit crunch'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's plan to rejuvenate the economy by prodding bank regulators to ease controls will have little immediate effect and could be harmful in the long run, economists and banking analysts say.

Bush, after a series of meetings with top advisers, announced Tuesday what he called "a very comprehensive program" to relieve a "credit crunch" the administration contends has left many sound borrowers, particularly small businesses, starved for loans.

It was applauded by bankers and home builders, but banking analysts said it would add little to a package issued in March.

STATE*Board approves giving condoms to students

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — High school students could have access to free condoms starting next semester under a new pilot program meant to help curb the spread of AIDS.

The Board of Education overwhelmingly approved the plan Tuesday, after hearing passionate testimony from health professionals, parents and students. A final vote is scheduled for December.

The school board also agreed to distribute other forms of birth control, including diaphragms and the pill, at a county-sponsored medical clinic at Balboa High School. That plan could start by the end of the current semester.

Head of trustees wants outside-CSU support

HAYWARD, Calif. (AP) — As state funding continues to dry up, the California State University system must develop outside sources of financial support, according to the head of the system's board of trustees.

William Campbell said the system should double its effort to raise money privately and will try in the meantime to limit tuition increases to 10 percent each year.

Campbell, of Newport Beach, visited the Hayward campus Tuesday during a statewide tour of all 20 campuses in the CSU system.

"We have a compact with the students of this state and a philosophical agreement with our board that we do not wish to raise our tuition more than 10 percent maximum to keep our fees down," said Campbell. "They are the lowest in the country right now, for similar institutions, at about $1,000 a year."

Fraternities face more problems

Rush signs on campus stolen, police question suspects

By Holly Gilbert
Staff Writer

Cal Poly fraternities are having some problems lately. Not only have Rush signs been vandalized, derogatory flyers posted, but some signs have been stolen.

Phi Sigma Kappa member Greg Cruz said his fraternity's sign was found on the roof of the Engineering West building on Oct. 5 at 1 a.m. Two Phi Sigma Kappa members went to the top of the roof and brought down about eight fraternity signs and placed them back on Dexter Lawn.

Public Safety Investigator Ray Berrett said there have been four students questioned about the flyers and vandalism, and he hopes these students will lead to more information concerning the thefts.

On the night of Sept. 30, two Cal Poly employees observed four men in the area of Dexter Lawn who they said looked suspicious, Berrett said.

The employees called the San Luis Obispo Police Department to check out the area. About the time the San Luis Obispo police drove by, another call came in to campus police from another witness about these students.

As the police drove up, three of the students ran off, Berrett said. The fourth stood back in the shadows. As the police flashed their lights on the individual, they noticed he had a stack of about 150 flyers in his possession, Berrett said.

He said these flyers were the same type of flyers that have been posted on campus over the past two years with phrases like: "Hey Frat Boy! Buy Any Friends Lately?"

Agriculture school hosts leadership conference

By Meredith Rehman
Staff Writer

While most students will be sleeping Saturday morning, presidents, vice presidents, secretaries, treasurers and representatives of campus clubs will be hard at work developing their leadership skills.

This Saturday from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m., the School of Agriculture is hosting its annual Leadership Conference at Camp Ocean Pines in Cambria.

The theme for this year's conference is "Focus on the Future — Developing a Leadership Vision."

Agriculture Education professor Scott Vernon said the main purpose of the conference is to foster and develop leadership skills in students.

"Now, more than ever, agriculture needs talented, articulate young people who are willing to accept the challenge of becoming industry leaders," Vernon said.

"We have to face some major issues in the next decade in areas of animal rights, pesticides, irrigation. If you're going to be a leader, you're going to have to look beyond today and have that futuristic goal."

Vernon said participants will develop an arsenal of leadership skills that are thought provoking, involvement oriented and follow Cal Poly's philosophy of "learn by doing."

Throughout the day, students will participate in leadership and time management workshops, team building activities and personnel management exercises. The programs are designed to help and challenge students to become leaders, Vernon said.

Agriculture education senior Rori Murray said the conference will be casual, but beneficial to students in leadership positions.

"Students become officers in campus clubs and suddenly they are asked to be leaders," said Murray, who is co-coordinating the conference. "They need these vital skills to guide their clubs. The programs will also bring the officer teams together as a working unit."

A highlight of the conference is keynote speaker Len Richardson, editor of California Farmer magazine. His speech will center on forward thinking in agriculture and how students can develop a strategic plan to become leaders in agriculture.

"Students will be getting an important message from Len Richardson, a person directly involved in state agricultural issues," Vernon said.

School of Agriculture Interim Dean Joe Sabol will also address students and relay his vision of the future of the school of agriculture.

Interested students must sign up on or before Friday in the Erhart Agriculture building, room 241.

The $5 registration fee will include breakfast and lunch.

Prior to the start of school, a man was arrested at the Sigma Kappa sorority house on Grand Avenue.

Clayton said more incidents occur near campus because there are more students and foot traffic.

"The victims and the offenders are in the same age category," he said. "They end up ripping off each other."

Clayton said that the intruders are sometimes Cal Poly or Cuesta students, and sometimes non-students, but they are almost always in their early 20s.

Clayton said that students tend to be careless about locking windows and doors and closing drapes. He recommended students who live in houses leave an outdoor light on in the back and the front.

Motion-sensitive lights can be installed that will go on whenever there is movement within 10 feet of the house. Clayton said these are a good idea because they cut down on energy bills as well as alert residents to potentially unwanted visitors.

Clayton said that there are more instances of prowling than appear statistically because the charge changes once the trespasser becomes an intruder.

"If the guy enters the house, the charge can be changed to felony burglary or attempted rape," he said. "If someone suspects a prowler around their home, they should call 911 immediately."

The caller should stay on the line with the dispatcher to give a description of the suspect and his exact location to the officers who respond to the call, he said.

Wilson defied pledged support

The Issue: Governor Pete Wilson's veto of a bill to ban job discrimination against homosexuals.

When Wilson campaigned for office, he pledged his intention to support the cause of homosexuals in state policy.

The veto of Assembly Bill 101 was a lack of response to this pledge, and a lack of response to a public demand. A recent California Poll of the subject found 62 percent of Californians were in favor of Wilson signing AB 101 compared to 29 percent against.

Wilson should have recognized this demand and taken it into account before he decided to veto AB 101.

Friday, Oct. 11 marks National Coming Out Day for gays, lesbians and bisexuals. It commemorates the Oct. 11, 1987 march on Washington D.C. by more than 500,000 supporters of homosexual equality. This is an important week for an important community in our state population.

Wilson's decision to kill AB 101 may or may not have been a good one depending on your individual stand on the issue, but what is clear for everyone is that he showed no response to the overwhelming public advocacy of homosexual rights.

Some sort of symbolism should be given by Wilson in this important week for homosexuals, but all he has to offer is the nastiest four letter word gays, lesbians and bisexuals in California could have heard.

Veto.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Cal Poly faculty is apathy-ridden

This is in response to the editorial printed on Thursday, October 3 titled "Baker, students executed good, healthy line of communication."

Why is it a heroic deed for Warren Baker to listen to students' legitimate concerns? Where was the professor? Did he/she think it was unimportant that the students had a lousy learning atmosphere? Is there a communication problem between faculty and administrators or is this professor suffering from that disease of Cal Poly's tenured faculty - APATHY??? Cheers to students who do not buy in to administrative complacency and faculty apathy!

Opinion editor is a boring idiot

How many times must the readers of Mustang Daily be exposed to the mindless banter spewed forth by Peter Hartlaub in his commentary articles?

As I suffered through Peter's latest batch of whining, several aspects of the article began to annoy me. In the past, the opinion section of the Mustang Daily has focused on pertinent issues that affect the student body. However, since Peter's installment as opinion editor the column seems to have taken the form of his personal gripe sheet.

The majority of the latest column was taken up criticizing Linnaea's Cafe and its patrons. While the "scene" at Linnaea's may not appeal to everyone, it does provide an atmosphere that is enjoyable for some. Just because Peter dislikes it is no reason to let him take free potshots from the safety of the column that he edits.

Peter also criticizes people who found fault in his last batch of nonsense. He calls them the "University Union bathroom wall writing corps." Let me assure you, Peter, I am a member of no such group; however, I too find your writing to be a waste of ink and paper that it is printed on. Also, if Peter is not ready to withstand criticism, perhaps he should not be in his current position.

Finally, and possibly the most irritating, is Peter's insistence on including his personal life in his articles. I don't care who he fantasizes playing "HORSE" with. Nor do I (nor any other students) care about Peter's biannual dates, or favorite type font. Get the message, Peter, we don't care what you like or dislike!

The strongest evidence of the weakness in the opinion section this year is the fact that Peter must write his own commentaries. No responsible journalist wants to be involved with such a frivolous and backwards column. Or is it that Peter, in his self-important head, dismisses other pieces so he can bore us to death again, and again and again?

COMMENTARY

GLBU recognizes 'Coming Out Day'

Submitted by Gays, Lesbians and Bisexuals United National Coming Out Day was established to commemorate the Oct. 11, 1987 march on Washington, D.C. by more than 500,000 gays, lesbians, bisexuals and their supporters. The purpose of this day is for members of the gay, lesbian and bisexual community to take pride in their sexual orientation and disclose it to at least one person in his or her life.

Coming out for the gay, lesbian or bisexual is not an easy process. Unfortunately, self-confidence is not completely independent of attitudes of other people. We are all affected by what other people think of us. Human beings need support from one another to find inner strength.

Very often, the gay, lesbian or bisexual has difficulty mustering up self-esteem because of lack of support of his or her sexuality. To tell anyone means risking rejection. The undisclosed gay, lesbian or bisexual is truly caught in a trap. To not tell anyone is to be miserable and lead an unfulfilled life; and to tell is to face the possible misery of losing one's loved ones through rejection.

Coming out is important because it works to undermine the irrational hate of the gay, lesbian and homosexual community. Growing up, most of us learned that homosexuality and bisexuality were wrong, bad, immoral etc. Because of this, it is easy to hate the concept of being homosexual or bisexual. It is much harder to hate the actual people. When a gay, lesbian or bisexual comes out to a friend or family member, that person is forced to deal with his or her feelings about homosexuality or bisexuality, coupled with feelings about the gay, lesbian or bisexual friend or relative.

Coming out to another person adds one name to the list of people who have to deal with homosexuality or bisexuality as a reality. And hopefully, in the future, it will not be so easy for that person to hate all gays, lesbians and bisexuals.

When asked why they came out, some of the members of the Gays, Lesbians and Bisexuals United gave the following reasons:

"I wanted peace of mind."
"To end the hell."
"I was tired of the lies."
"I wanted to be honest with myself."
"It was time to face reality."
"I am much happier living without stress being who I am, than living a lie in the prison of my mind."

A general theme can be seen in these answers: Truth, and more specifically, truth to self. A need existed for these people to tell others that they are gay, lesbian or bisexual. The legitimacy society would not give them, they claimed for themselves.

"I am a good person and I'm gay. The two are inseparable parts of the whole of me. And I am unwilling to censor myself to make you comfortable."

Many argue that it is all right for others to be gay, but that they don't want to hear about it. We maintain that it is necessary for you to hear about it. Until we can talk openly about homosexuality and bisexuality, until we can all share the same civil rights, we plan to keep bringing up the subject of homosexuality and bisexuality. It is a matter of self-preservation.

It should also be said that coming out should not be exclusive to gays, lesbians and bisexuals. The GLBU cannot change the prejudice of Cal Poly on its own. We need all of your help. If you have and respect gay, lesbian or bisexual friends or relatives, stand up and say so. Or, if you respect this editorial, let it be known. If someone you know starts talking prejudicially against gays, lesbians and bisexuals, tell the person you don't appreciate that kind of talk. And if you feel so inclined, tell that person why that talk bothers you. By letting the prejudice go unchecked, acceptance of the hate is expressed. The hate must end.

We are gays, lesbians and bisexuals. We affirm that positively and with self-acceptance. We invite your support.

The Gays, Lesbians and Bisexuals United meets every Tuesday night at 7:00 p.m. in Faculty Office Building 24B to promote awareness and understanding of homosexuality and bisexuality. We strive to provide a support system for members of, and those connected in some way to, the gay, lesbian and bisexual community. Because we believe that coming out is a personal process which occurs at different speeds and different degrees, we respect the confidentiality of all those who attend. Thank you for your time.

This article was co-authored by Scott Mason, John Kusters, Daniel Phillips and Daniel Grieb, all officers of the Gays, Lesbians and Bisexuals United chapter on the Cal Poly campus.

Jazz legend to perform at Poly

Fiery trumpeter
Freddie Hubbard
heats up the brass

By David Bock
Editorial Staff

In the late 1950s and early 1960s, a handful of musicians were responsible for the evolution of contemporary jazz and its endurance as an indigenous American art form.

Among those early pioneers was a fiery trumpet player from Indiana who burst onto the scene to the delight of jazz enthusiasts everywhere.

Freddie Hubbard, one of the pre-eminent jazz legends, will demonstrate his pyrotechnic, virtuoso playing during a Tuesday night concert in the Cal Poly Theatre. The concert, which begins at 8 p.m., is a joint presentation by Cal Poly Arts and public radio station KCBX.

Chris O'Connell, DJ of KCBX's "Morning Cup of Jazz," a popular daily jazz program, expressed his enthusiasm for the upcoming performance.

"I'm incredibly excited about it," he said. "Freddie Hubbard is monstrous. He is a ferocious, ferocious trumpet player, and it's really fantastic having him come to San Luis Obispo. It should be a great concert."

O'Connell said that the lack of jazz in San Luis Obispo makes Hubbard's appearance at Cal Poly especially sweet.

"It's not like we have a lot of jazz happening in the area," he said. "And so to have someone like Freddie Hubbard — a real legend in the field — come to the area is really special."

Tuesday's performance marks the first jazz event sponsored by Cal Poly Arts. It is also the first time Cal Poly Arts has joined with KCBX to present a concert, said Cal Poly Arts Program Manager Peter Wilt.

"We are happy to be able to make the alliance between KCBX and Cal Poly Arts and hope to do it again in the future," he said.

Historically, Hubbard has been associated with most of the important jazz musicians of the '50s and '60s, such as Wes Montgomery, Sonny Rollins, Max Roach and Art Blakey. He also has played on some of the most influential and classic recordings of that time, including Ornette Jazz trumpeter Freddie Hubbard brings a style of fire and force to Tuesday's concert at Cal Poly.

Coleman's "Free Jazz" and Oliver Nelson's "Blues and the Abstract Truth."

Jazz writer Ian Carr, in the book "Jazz: The Essential Companion," said that even at that early stage in Hubbard's career, his style was already fully formed.

Carr writes, "He had absorbed his influences and created his own sound; a crisp, full-blooded, brassy tone, a highly personal way of rhythmic inflection, a brilliantly fleet technique, and a vocabulary of tonal resources and effects which were new to the trumpet."

Hubbard went on to win Downbeat magazine's New Star Award for trumpet in 1961, as well as several Grammy Awards and nominations. He has also recorded some two dozen records as either a soloist or band leader.

More recently, Hubbard spent the summer performing at amphitheaters throughout the country with jazz vocalists Nancy Wilson and Joe Williams.

During the Cal Poly concert, Hubbard and his quartet will perform songs from his new release, "Bolivia," as well as songs from the standard jazz repertoire.

Tickets for the concert are still available, and a reception with Hubbard and his band is tentatively planned for after the performance.

Tickets are $12 and $10 for the general public, $10 and $8 for students. Call 756-1421 for reservations.

'Jekyll and Hyde' jaunts to success

By Cindy Lee
Staff Writer

Robert Louis Stevenson's "The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" is yet another of The Great American Melodrama's successes.

The Melodrama's version of this ageless play, directed by its own artistic director, Neal Lavine, follows Henry Jekyll (Greg Stephan) from the onset of his experiments.

Jekyll hopes to better the future of mankind by deriving a drug which would separate the good and evil in man's soul.

Unfortunately, he is opposed by almost everyone around him — the chief of staff of the town's hospital, Dr. John Lanyon (Brian Kurlander) and his future in-laws, Sir Charles Carew (Philip Jones) and Lady Agnes Carew (Christine Williamson) being his main opponents.

Even Jekyll's best friend and lawyer, George Utterson (Eric Bishop), and his fiancée, Diana Carew (Diana Ward), do not seem to understand.

However, Jekyll forges ahead and decides to test this new drug on himself. What happens is a horrid and painful transformation into his hideous and evil alter ego, Edward Hyde.

Hyde quickly finds his way about London, brutalizing all in his path including young Richard Enfield (Craig Hunt), a former suitor of Diana's, and Ivy Pearson (Suzanne Dodd), a bar maid whom Hyde takes as his woman.

After months of this charade, Jekyll finds himself turning into the alter ego without taking the drug. The struggle for control over Jekyll's body begins, eventually leaving only one survivor.

Playboy contest awards prizes...and publication

By Brian Volk
Staff Writer

I could have written that!
How many times do you say that when walking out of a movie theater or putting down a book? How many times has a great idea for a story popped into your head but is soon put to rest when classes, a job or other signs of reality creep in?

Besides, you're no writer. Right?

Well, if you still feel like letting your creative talents flow, sharing that "million-dollar" story idea...look no further. The sixth annual Playboy College Fiction Competition may be what you're looking for.

The contest, which starts early in September, is the only American short-story competition held by a national magazine that is aimed at all college students of all ages.

Mark Healy, assistant fiction editor for Playboy, said the magazine gets over 1,000 entries a year from 18- to 70-year-olds getting their degrees.

It gets stories from Asia, Africa and Europe. It gets stories from those students who have taken a semester or two off, from those studying abroad and from a variety of undergraduates and graduate students in all kinds of disciplines.

"We even get one or two submissions from prisoners," Healy said. "Many state penitentiaries have college degree programs, so they are eligible too."

Once all the stories are submitted by the deadline of Jan. 1, they are ready to be judged.

After the field is narrowed to about 20 manuscripts, the stories are then handed over to the magazine's editorial staff and "outsiders" (working fiction writers). A final decision comes with the editor-in-chief's vote.

The second-prize winner gets $500 and a year's subscription to the magazine. The first-prize winner receives $3,000 and something that teachers, editors and fiction writers know is much more valuable than the money. They get published.

Getting published, especially

"If the story has sexual content but is a good story with imagination, then it is fine."

— Mark Healy, Playboy assistant fiction editor

by a national magazine, is what Healy said is more valuable than any accompanying prize money.

"It provides a great opportunity for young writers to get published and be noticed in the writing community. Getting published is the bottom line."

Some of those who have won have moved on to "greater" things, Healy said.

Potomac State College senior A. M. Wellman, for example, expanded his 1989 first-prize-winning story into a novel which was later optioned to the movie industry for $250,000.

In addition to the wide recognition winners receive, Healy said they also learn about the commercial fiction process and how to apply their own style to the commercial fiction market.

Cal Poly English professor Douglas Keesey, who teaches a horror fiction class, feels this competition and others like it can be important tools for prospective writers.

"Winning these contests gives the students something to distinguish themselves from the rest of the crowd," Keesey said. "A lot of students want to continue their education and pursue a (master's degree in fine arts)."

Keesey said that there are also a lot of highly selective schools which require the student to send written material along with their application.

"When the school sees that a prize is attached or the story has been published, they look at the story and you a little more differently," Keesey said.

Keesey said that Playboy is a fascinating case because, despite its image, many fiction writers recognize it as one of the best places to be published.

"There's nothing quite like this magazine," Keesey said. It "has a horrible reputation in some areas and also has a superb reputation among fiction writers. Many schools that offer MFA programs know that having a story published in Playboy is pretty important."

Besides Playboy, Keesey also recommended Esquire Magazine as having a highly respectable

Not surprisingly, the playhouse was filled to capacity Saturday night. The classic tale of good vs. evil drew an audience of all ages.

Regardless of age, the audience seemed to enjoy this skewed version of Jekyll and Hyde.

Stephan, taking on the roles of both Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, easily portrayed the duo.

From his loving gestures toward friends and family as Jekyll, to his enraged tantrums as Hyde, Stephan played the extremes and everything in between, beautifully.

Upon taking the mysterious drug, Dr. Jekyll would go into convulsions in his laboratory. Out of control, he would fling himself to the floor and appear moments later as the crazed and intensely grotesque Mr. Hyde. With spittle flying from his bloody gums, the evil Mr. Hyde would wreak havoc upon those in Dr. Jekyll's life.

The transformation from good to evil and back was done swiftly and smoothly right before the eyes of the audience.

Along with clever stage movement by the cast in order to hide physical changes of the character, the doctor's experiment table functioned as a curtain to the audience during the ghastly transformations from good to evil.

Dodd's performance as the crazed Mr. Hyde's unwilling companion was fantastic. Dodd seized the audience's pity with her helplessness in the couple's one-sided relationship.

Her inability to flee the brutal grip of Hyde's adoration played on the audience's sympathy, provoking added hatred toward the evil Hyde.

The play was followed by a short turn-of-the-century vaudeville revue, which cast a comical ray on an evening of murder and intrigue.

Several short musical and stand-up comic skits were performed by various members of the cast, bringing back to memory the old vaudevillian revues of yesteryear.

"The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" plays every Wednesday through Sunday with two shows on Saturday, from Sept. 26 to Nov. 17. Call 489-2499 for details and ticket reservations.

CONTEST

writing competition with the "prestige" of Playboy but minus the risque stigma.

Healy said the only competition which he feels compares close to the one of Playboy is the Rolling Stone Magazine College Journalism Contest.

Cal Poly English professor Al Landwehr, who has been teaching creative writing classes for several years, said that Mademoiselle Magazine also has a reputable writing contest.

Landwehr himself had a story published by Playboy 10 years ago called "A Cup of Coffee with the Cardinals," a baseball story about the difficulty men have communicating with each other.

Since then, though, Landwehr has stopped sending stories to Playboy because he feels the magazine exploits women.

Locally, Landwehr also mentioned the creative writing contest Cal Poly holds every winter quarter as a potential outlet for young writers.

Started in 1971, the contest awards prizes, and the writers' work used to appear in Mustang Daily.

For interested writers, Healy suggested a few tips to keep in mind when thinking about entering a writing competition.

Healy said that content is always more important than the quality of punctuation. He said he can tell that a lot of the students are self-conscious about proper writing, so many of the submissions are cliché.

"What we look for is imaginative stories with well-constructed thought," Healy said. "We want lively stories that develop."

Considering Playboy's well-known reputation, Healy said that often people think that what the publication is looking for are stories that feature strong sexual content.

But that is not the case. "Those who submit their stories are not going to win points by having more sexual content," Healy said. "If the story has sexual content but is a good story with imagination, then it is fine."

STOLEN SIGNS

or "Hey Frat Boy...Does It Make You Feel Powerful To Rape A Girl Half Your Size?" These flyers are always signed, "Paid for by the committee for a frat and rape free America," Berrett said.

The student in possession of the flyers was questioned and released. During the questioning, Berrett said the suspect "denied any involvement even though he had been seen by two other people holding them (the flyers)." Berrett said that it is not a criminal offense to have the flyers, but if those students are the same individuals who are vandalizing the signs, it could lead to serious charges.

After talking to the student, three other names were acquired by campus police, Berrett said. Berrett did not say specifically how the names were acquired. All three denied any involvement in the anti-fraternity incidents when questioned by campus police.

Director of Campus-Student Relations/Judicial Affairs Carl Wallace said he has not yet received the report from Public Safety.

"We have a 'wish list' that we keep of items that someone wants but that we don't have in at the time of their request," he said. "When the warehouse receives an item on the list they will call the person who requested it."

When a department wants to get rid of any materials, they fill out a property-surveying form and the warehouse clerks go and pick it up.

"We don't check to see if the items work or not, we don't question the department heads," said Barbara Flynn, inventory clerk for the state property office on campus.

Usually the items are broken, she said. In the case of computers, they are either outdated or software cannot be found for them, she said.

"If an item is on the state inventory, it has to be surveyed and go through the warehouse," she said. Departments cannot just throw things away.

Each survey request has to have the proper signatures and a reason listed for why the department no longer wants the item, she said.

Public auctions are held twice a year to sell any unclaimed equipment. The next auction is set for Nov. 2.
